

Before I get started on this post, let me say that I love the users of my Android apps. I've gotten over 6,000 ratings on the Android Market for Screubl, and nearly 10,000 emails and forum postings over the past two years. The majority of my contact with users results in positive interactions, and I have a long list of requested feature enhancements, bug reports, and ideas from the hundreds-of-thousands of users that find my apps helpful. It really is fun interacting with a healthy community of users.

However, I particularly love hearing from those users that hate me, and there seem to be a lot of those too. Something about my personality makes it impossible to ignore the many creative insults that come my way. I'm pretty sure that my responses and the ensuing interactions are not productive (and sometimes downright unhealthy), but it entertains me. In the last few weeks I was the lucky recipient of a market ratings ambush by a competing app to CrazyCat HD, so some of this anger may be artificial, but I like to think that there are a fair number of people out there that genuinely dislike me and what I do.

So here's a list of the ten most amusing hate mails that I've received over the last two years. I've edited names and obscenities, but otherwise these are cut and pasted from my inbox...

10. "Great fing video, moron. What kind of a jerk shoots a HOWTO in the woods, anyway??? Your app is ok, but I'm going to uninstall it on principle since you're such a pretty-boy douche."

9. "Screubl is a stoopid name. F YOU. I hope you die."

8. "Who do you think you are adding advertisements to Screubl Lite? Taking an awesome free app and trying to squeeze money out of it sucks. I've been using this app for over a year now and was thinking of upgrading but now you'll never be get my $2."

7. "I know where you live you fing prick. You think because you refunded my money that this is over? If I had a car I would drive down there and kick your cheap  a. FIX IT. FIX IT
